A quarter of companies received 0 - meaning they provide no substantial information regarding its corporate transparency or do not administer a personal website.

This report was produced by Transparency International Lithuania as part of a project led by the Transparency International Secretariat with funding from the Siemens Integrity Initiative. The content of companies' websites has been assessed on August and September 2017.

How Transparent is Business in Lithuania?

Assessment of the Largest Companies | 2017

TI Lithuania analysed corporate websites while looking for publicly available information on the company's anti-corruption programme, organisational structure and financial reporting.

The report evaluates 49 largest companies in Lithuania based on their income records for 2016.

One-fifth did really well.

Over the past three years, the largest companies in Lithuania have become more transparent. In 2014 their average score was 22 points (out of 100), whereas in 2017 it was 32.

During the project, one-third have become more transparent.

17 out of 49

Almost one in three (16) of the companies have a confidential channel to report possible wrongdoings.

22 companies publicly state a commitment to “zero tolerance to corruption”, although the same number (22) of businesses does not provide any information on anti-corruption measures in place.
